

PROFESSIONALS OR POLITICIANS FOR NEW MEXICO?

New Mexico is one of only 11 states that still allows politicians — not qualified experts — to regulate our public utilities, guiding our environmental and economic future.

But just as Gov. Lujan Grisham follows the advice of experts to stop the spread of COVID, there is a proposal to put qualified experts on our Regulation Commission. The bipartisan proposal would require real experts with defined credentials to oversee our utilities, and these professionals would be prohibited from having any financial interest in any public utility.
